No Wonder Brown Declined.

Stanislaus V. Henkel, Philadelphia's authority on books and autographs, was describing the Governor Pennypacker library.

Suddenly he paused and laughed. "That was an error," he said. "If such an error as that got into print, I would feel as uncomfortable as the lawyer's wife."

"This lawyer's wife lived uptown, and one evening her husband brought a friend home with him to dinner."

"There is only one bottle of wine," the lawyer's wife whispered to him in the hall. "That's a glass around. Don't ask Brown to have more. He might accept, and then where would we be?"

"Very well, dear," said the lawyer. "But at dinner he asked Brown again and again to have more wine, Brown, though, refused steadily and firmly. A dozen times he was urged to drink. A dozen times he declined with great determination."

"James, what ailed you at dinner?" cried the wife, as soon as Brown was gone. "Didn't I tell you there was only one bottle of wine. Why did you insist so on Mr. Brown's having more wine, more wine, more wine?"

"My dear, said the lawyer, I forgot entirely."

"His wife frowned impatiently. 'But what did you suppose I was kicking you under the table for?' she asked."

"The lawyer puzzled, answered, 'My dear, you didn't kick me.'—Exchange.

RECTOR OF ST. LUKE'S.

Ashburnham, Ontario, Testifies to the Good Qualities of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

ASHBURNHAM, Ont., April 18, 1903. —I think it is only right that I should tell you what a wonderful effect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has produced. The day before Easter I was so distressed with a cold and cough that I did not think to take any duties the next day, as my voice was almost choked by the cough. The same day I received an order from you for your Cough Remedy. I at once procured a sample bottle, and took about three doses of the medicine. To my great relief the cough and cold had completely disappeared and I was able to preach three times on Easter Day. I know that this rapid and effective cure was due to your Cough Remedy. I make this testimonial without solicitations, being thankful to have found such a God-sent remedy. Respectfully yours,
E. A. LANGFELDT, M. A.,
Rector of St. Luke's Church.

COSMOPOLITAN

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION

BETHEL NEWS

Regular Price, $6.50

Sensational Price for a Limited Time, $3.25

FOR ALL TO ONE ADDRESS.

We are very fortunate in being able to arrange with the publishers of these three well-known magazines to offer a subscription for the coming year at this sensational price. We have decided to let our readers have the full advantage of the reduction and to cut the price of the NEWS as well, in order to get quickly a large body of paid-in-advance subscribers. Subscriptions to the NEWS will date from January 1, 1906, so all who subscribe now will get the NEWS FREE up to that date.

BUSINESS PROPOSITION

Scores of our readers are constant readers of the Review of Reviews, and know that it stands without a peer in its class; as many more have already become wedded to the Cosmopolitan and still as many more would be lost in their own homes without the Woman's Home Companion. You are to buy one or more of these valuable magazines anyway; why not have them all and the BETHEL NEWS thrown in for just a bit more than you would pay for any one of them alone?

If you are a subscriber to any one or more of these papers this offer will apply on renewals and save you some money.

With this outfit you will be well supplied with reading matter during the long evenings of the approaching winter. Seriously haven't we made a good selection? Could you have selected more wisely?

The Review of Reviews.

Many other publications are desirable, and you may prefer this or prefer that fiction and art publication, but the Review of Reviews is necessary. Substantial American men and women are going to keep up with the times and they are going to take the shortest cut—which is the Review of Reviews. Twelve hundred pictures a year; departments giving the best there is in all the other important magazines all over the world; timely and informing articles, almost as fresh and full of news interest as a daily paper; and Dr. Albert Shaw's interpretation of the public men, events and issues of the month, in "The Progress of the World."

The Cosmopolitan.

A leading magazine for eighteen years. With the recent change of ownership it has been improved. It is far better in every respect, and aims to be the best in its field. Every year or so there's one notable advance in the forward movement among the many magazines. This year it is the Cosmopolitan. And this shall be a splendid permanent success. Its gains in news-stand sales and in subscriptions have been remarkable. And these are due only to the new life and real merit. The Cosmopolitan is printing WHAT THE PEOPLE WANT. It contains regularly the best fiction, best special articles on timely topics and best illustrations that money can buy.

Woman's Home Companion.

The Woman's Home Companion is for every member of the family. For our bright, earnest, cultured, home-loving American women it is an ideal entertainer and helper in a thousand congenial ways; but the fathers and brothers and sons join in its perusal by the fireside, and the children eagerly turn to the pages that are written for them.

The issues for the forth-coming year will be unique in conception, and execution, rich and varied in contents, and brilliant with the finest, most elaborate and artistic illustrations obtainable.

Enough said, You need no further introduction to these magazines. They are old friends with whom you are well acquainted.

Business propositions appeal to business people. This is a business proposition, and if those who read are business people, we shall expect to hear from them forthwith.

Don't wait. Remember this offer applies to renewals as well as new subscribers, and that the publishers of the magazines will not allow us to extend this offer but a few weeks.

Your name and address on the accompanying coupon, together with $3.25, entitles you to this offer if sent to the BETHEL NEWS before December 1.

LOVE AND LONELINESS

By CHARLES SLOANE REID

THE sun had buried half its red disk below the border of the prairie, and the silence of night was settling down over the expansive plain of grass. Partially sheltered by a few mesquite bushes, burned a small camp fire; and near it sat a young woman on the ground, with hands clasped, and with beautiful, sorrow-fixed eyes staring into the face of a dead man lying stretched upon a blanket with his feet toward the fire.

Still, motionless as the dead, sat the girl, while the darkness deepened round her, bringing the outline of her form into bolder relief in the glare of the blaze. The trace of tears was on her cheeks, but her eyes were dry now, her features bearing a hard, strained expression, but one which could not quite dim the marvelous beauty of her face.

The sun sank lower, and the darkness came on, bringing the light of the camp fire into clearer distinctness. Alone, with the body of her dead father, miles from any human habitation, on the open prairie, with the night before her; the terror, the awfulness of the situation had stunned the girl, and she could only sit on her feet and stare into the dead face before her.

Only a year before, how different all had been. But misfortune had been sure and swift, and, broken in health, the father, seconded by the daughter's wishes to go far away from the old associations, began that emigration to the west, which had ended here on the broad prairie. One of the wagon horses had died the day before, provisions were getting low in the locker, and the end of all seemed very near to the girl. The thought came to her that if she could but lay her head upon the now cold, pulseless breast of her father and pass peacefully away, as peacefully as he had passed, all would be well, the end of things would have been fitting. But she felt the great strength of her young arms, the vigorous action of her heart—starvation would be slow. And in the meantime, decay would come to the loved form before her, the blistering sun of the daytime would rapidly accomplish it.

The girl sat and thought of these things, while the night deepened round her. Everything was deeply silent, until the sharp yelp of a prairie coyote cut the silence like a sharp-toothed blade. The girl shuddered. Another yelp came from out of the grass near by, and this was quickly followed by others.

The girl crouched lower toward the dead man and almost held her breath. She recalled the many stories she had read and heard repeated, of travelers being overtaken and attacked by packs of hungry wolves, and in imagination she could already feel the sharp little fangs of the coyotes tearing her soft flesh.

But the fire still burned, a steady flame, the one point of reflection in a vast sea of darkness. How long would the suspense last, came the thought to the girl. She dared not look round her, in the dread of encountering the hungry gleam of myriads of little eyes which she knew must be looking out of the near-by darkness. For a moment her thoughts dwelt upon her own name, "Sylvine," given her because her mother had loved the woods, and now Sylvine was associating her present situation with stories of the Russian and northwestern forests.

She took the cold hand of her father in her own and stroked it gently. And she prayed, not to escape, but that the pain and torture of it might be short. And while she prayed, the sound of hoof strokes came to her ear, and she shuddered again in sympathy for the poor beast which had been hobbled and turned loose there to find his food.

But the shudder had scarcely passed, when the sharp report of a rifle, followed by the howl of a coyote, rang out quite near the camp. Then came a rapid fire of shots and by a good marksman, for they told effectively among the wild dogs of the wilderness in the glare of the lone protecting camp fire. And the sound of a voice also reached Sylvine's ear, a human voice, at the moment of her deepest despair.

"Hello," said the voice. Sylvine arose and turned about. "I take it, you're in trouble, miss," continued the young man, dismounting and coming forward; "an' I thought if I could lend ye a hand." The eyes were frank and blue, and the face smooth and boyish, under the turned-up brim of the broad sombrero. "I'm jest a herder, miss," he went on, "but folks in trouble are always my folk, especially if they're in frocks. I saw the situation from a little way out and took the liberty of droppin' a few o' the aggravatin' coyotes, though they were only after the dead hoss, an' maybe, the—the—" The man glanced toward the corpse. "It's your father, is it, miss?" in a tone which bore the true ring of sympathy.

Sylvine nodded, and while tears began to fall from her eyes, she made a step toward her would-be protector. "It was awful," she said, "being here alone and unable to die, too." "To die, too? Well, hardly. The Lord knows His business. There are flowers He can't quite afford to have cut down. They light up the blank spaces, you know, and make folks remember there's a heaven. I thought of that the moment I looked over the grass here and saw your face in the light of the camp fire, seein' how death had been at work around ye."

Sylvine had drawn a little nearer to the young man, with a feeling of unhesitating confidence. "I know it was wrong to wish for death, but all was so terribly, awfully lonely. There seemed nothing left in life for me."

"Well, I don't know about that. I've been livin' lonely for some years myself, an' I guess I've enjoyed it fairly well, though there has always seemed to be something lackin', couldn't tell jest what—till a few minutes ago. But maybe I'm talkin' too much. My ranch is not far off. The boys call me 'Lonely Lem.' I've got a dolly off here to myself, and ye're welcome to the whole inside of it, for as long as ye want to stay, an' I'll stand night guard on the outside. An' when ye want to go, I'll take ye across country to the railroad, 40 miles from my ranch."

Lem stopped, gently lifted the corpse from the ground and placed it in the wagon. Then, harnessing his own and the remaining team horse to the van, he assisted Sylvine to a place in front, and drove away, with only the starlight to guide.

Lonely Lem had found a new occupation in life. He was guarding a treasure in his dolly that to him grew more precious each day that Sylvine remained under his protection. And he began to look forward with an accompanying heartache to the day when the girl's grief had grown old enough for her to care to leave the vicinity of her father's grave. Each day added strength to the conviction in Lem's mind that the one thing needed to piece out his life was a woman's love, and that woman. At this point in his thoughts, Lem would invariably shrug his shoulders in awe of the gap that seemed to lie between them.

At last the day came. Sylvine stood in the doorway looking out across the prairie toward the sunrise, while Lem sat at her feet.

"I feel," began Sylvine, slowly, "that I have imposed upon your goodness as long as I should, and it is time for me to go away—away—somewhere. But heaven only knows where I shall go." The girl suddenly dropped her head upon her arm and burst into tears.

Lem sprang to his feet and hovered over Sylvine in the doorway.

"Is it as bad as that, little 'un?" he cried, close to her ear. "Because, if ye're lonely, I guess it won't offend ye if I tell ye about what's been burnin' inside o' me ever since I first saw your face in the light o' the camp fire, with the coyotes yelpin' round ye."

Sylvine was silent. But something caused her to lean toward Lem.

"I knew all the time, little 'un, somethin' had been left out o' my life, an' that moment I found out what it was. But I never meant to take any advantage of ye, an' kep' my love to myself. But I've lain out there under the stars, nights, an' gazed into the sky for hours an' hours, wonderin' jes' wonderin' to myself if it was possible one like you could ever find it in her heart to love one like me."

"And I—" Sylvine now leaned against his breast, and her arms, thrown back over her head, had caught Lem's neck. "I've been loving you all these days."

Lem's face was now drawn down, until his cheek and Sylvine's were pressed together. And Lem whispered: "Little 'un, ye've made me so happy, I don't reckon I'll ever want to do anything else but laugh an' sing."—American Queen.

Daylight Shall Come In.

"It is a good plan to let a little daylight into things", writes one of Maine's foremost business men (not a politician) after reading in a Maine paper a reprint of our editorial last week on State printing and this is the sentiment which is coming to us from all over Maine. There is a demand for light in the dark corners so long filled with political corruption, which though nauseating to all who believe in the principles of right and justice, and a positive menace to the best interests of the citizens of Maine, yet has been tolerated, fostered and almost crowned for party's sake.

Why not have this light? Thousands of good people in Maine, good Republicans if you please, the honest brain and brawn of that party are thoroughly tired of these political trusts. They want leaders who will champion moral issues and set this march for reform, even though political rings be broken and political bosses be overthrown. They have been hanging on accepting renewed promises and hoping that the rope would be cut until they are getting out of patience, and unless there be some tangible signs of relief, at least within the twentieth century, the Republican party may expect a small multitude to sue for divorce.

The State printing trust is not the only one which needs attention but it is the one which has most recently disappointed thousands of people; and with due courtesy to our brother editors who wear larger caps than we, we would ask if this question does not involve a principle worthy of a few drops of ink. As a "stitch in time saves nine", so a "word fully-spoken" may prevent the hand of the State printing trust from casting the vote of the administration when awards are to be made again, and may save some future eruption.

Good, healthful discussion is always in order. A vigorous application of truth will injure no just cause, while denunciation of error is the world's best panacea. Had more of these remedies been applied in Portland during the past decade the result might have been different last Monday. Speak up. The topic is worthy of your best thought. Speak truly, and though your words shall cut political rings in twain, they will find lodgment on the ears of good reform-seeking citizens of Maine, and you shall see their fruit. Speak truly, and if we are bound by error thy truth shall make us free.

More About State Printing

Neither Governor Cobb nor any of the Councillors are printers by trade, hence when the Legislature placed the State printing in their hands it became necessary for them to call to their assistance some one who was familiar with the business to take charge of the technical features and make recommendations for their consideration.

Mr. E. N. Carver of Rumford Falls was engaged, and Mr. Carver has since been an important factor in connection with the State printing, he having been relied upon to open and tabulate the bids, prior to the meeting of the Governor and Council for their consideration, and to make the figures and calculations by which the Governor and Council should be governed in their attempt to award the printing to the lowest bidders. And it was upon his figures, calculations and recommendations that the awards were made.

Still challenging the legal and moral right of the Governor and Council to give the slightest consideration to the conditional bid of the Burleigh Trust, we will assume for the time being, that said bid will receive consideration, if, from the figures of the various bidders, a ghost of a reason can be given to the public for keeping the cream of the work within the ring. Hence figures are resorted to with a vengeance. We have succeeded in getting hold of some of those figures, and we submit that if our readers will take the trouble to follow us carefully through them, they will see shadows cast by the hand of a very shrewd but not wholly impartial Providence.

All figuring, all calculating and all estimates seem to have been made with one desperate object in view, namely, to show that the best interests of the State will be served by giving Burleigh & Flynt just what they ask for. This may have been all accidental, but it was a series of extremely fortunate accidents to the conditional bidders, for every movement of the mathematical checker-board, all the figuring and calculating on class A, has had the effect of diminishing the actual percentage of saving on Mr. Bowler's bid under Burleigh & Flynt's.

Since referring to State printing in our last issue we have received a list of the jobs on which the figures were made, and from which the estimated cost of all the work in class A was obtained. There are ten of these jobs and in submitting his figures and estimates to the Governor and Council, Mr. Carver stated that the ten samples were selected as "fair examples" of all the various classes of composition, the average runs of press work and two or three grades of stock. One of the things to which we take serious exception is those "fair examples".

The three things of material importance in figuring the State's book and pamphlet work by the bids made are straight composition, rule and figure work, and press work. On straight composition, we are 4 cents per thousand ems or 10.8 per cent. under Burleigh & Flynt; on rule and figure work we are 10 cents per thousand ems or 13.3 per cent. under them. As near as we can estimate, at least 3/4 of all the composition in class A is rule and figure work, but granting that not more than 1/2 is rule and figure work and the rest straight composition, this will show a net saving of 12.06 per cent. on all composition in favor of our figures under the figures of the conditional bidders.

The only remaining item of importance is press work. On press work our price is $1.60 per thousand impressions on the first thousand and theirs is $1.75; but, on additional thousands above the first thousand, we are $1.50 per thousand while they are but $1.25. Here is where they have underbid us. Since we are under them on composition, and under them on press work on the first thousand, in fact on all editions up to 1600, the only possible way of reducing our saving, and make as good a showing as possible for the conditional bidders, is to do the figuring on jobs calling for editions of over 1600.

Now what of the ten fair examples? We have asked for a list of all the book and pamphlet jobs which would come under class A and the number required of each and the same has been furnished. There are 40 in all, ranging in editions from 125 to 10,000 with an average of 1868. In this list of 40 there are 7 which have editions of 4000 or more. In this list of "fair examples" there are 7 which have editions of 4000 or more, including the only one which has 10,000 and the only one which has 6000. The average of the "fair examples" is 4165, while the average of all the jobs as stated is 1868. Figuring the press work at our figures and at the figures of the conditional bidders on the average jobs and there would not be difference enough to talk about, but figuring it on the basis of average editions of 4165 and it makes a difference of hundreds of dollars.

Twenty-four of the forty jobs range in quantity from 125 to 1500. On each and every one of them the press work would cost less at our figures than at Burleigh & Flynt's, on six there would be practically no difference, while on the other ten ranging from 2500 to 10,000 there would be a noticeable difference in favor of their bid.

Since our figures would have saved the State over 12 per cent. on composition and about 10 per cent. on press work on all jobs of 1000 copies, and that the only figures which can be made at our disadvantage are on press work on large editions, what inference can be drawn from the fact that in the selection of "fair examples" the 7 jobs having editions of over 4000 are included? The ten "fair examples" were figured and those figures (which are mighty interesting figures and will be considered later) were made to show that the "fair examples" would cost just 3.14 per cent. less at our figures than at Burleigh & Flynt's, and since 3.14 per cent. is saved on the "fair examples", that per cent. is taken of all the work in class A (including the twenty-four jobs on which our price was the lowest on press work as well as on composition) and a net saving of $1300.25 on the entire book and pamphlet work is shown, and these are the figures put up to the Governor and Council and which convinced that body that our bid on class A would save the State under the bid of Burleigh & Flynt just $1300.25, while by some other figures from some other "fair example" (which by the way we have not been able to get sight of yet) it was shown that The Sentinel Publishing Co. would save the State 10 per cent. or about $2500, so of course if one saving must be sacrificed to get rid of the Legislative printing it must be the 3.14 per cent. one.

But let us see about the 3.14 per cent. It has been shown that our bid would have reduced the price of all compositions 12.06 per cent. Reckoning the press work on the average number of all the jobs, namely, 1868 and our bid would have caused a loss of one-fortieth of one per cent. on the press work, and if there is any way to demonstrate on Mr. Carver's mathematical checkerboard, how that one-fortieth of one per cent. loss on the press work can cut the 12.06 per cent. saving on composition down to 3.14 per cent. saving on the entire work, we would like to know the move. In the meantime let it be said that our bid on composition and press work would give an average saving on the entire work in class A of at least 11 per cent., and 11 per cent. of the entire amount, $41,409.09 as reported, would show a net saving of $4554.99 instead of $1300.25 as was represented to the Governor and Council.

But even the clever selection of the "fair examples" could never bring a real saving of over 11 per cent. down to 3.14 per cent. so figures must do their part and they seem to have done their part faithfully and well. We have, thus far figured just one of the "fair examples", the Report of Industrial and Labor Statistics, one of the 4000 class.

The book contains 240 pages and will cost, as awarded to Burleigh Flint, as follows:

218 pp. plain 10 point, 314,356 ems, at 37 cents per thousand,	$116.32
5 pp. plain 8 point, 11200 ems, at 37 cents per thousand,	4.14
17 pp. rule and figure work, 67,915 ems, at 75 cents per thousand,	50.94
PRESS WORK.
First 500 impressions, $1.00
Second 500 impressions, .75
Balance 3000 impressions, .75
Total per run,	$5.50
Total for 15 runs,	82.50
Stock,	198.45
Total cost as awarded,	$452.35

COST ACCORDING TO BID OF E. C. BOWLER.

218 pp. plain 10 point, 314,356 ems, at 33 cents per thousand,	$103.74
5 pp. plain 8 point, 11,200 ems, at 33 cents per thousand,	3.69
17 pp. rule and figure work, 67,915 ems, at 65 cents per thousand,	44.14
PRESS WORK.
First 500 impressions, $0.80
Second 500 impressions, .80
Balance 3000 impressions, .40
Total per run,	$6.10
Total for 15 runs,	91.50
Stock,	207.50
Total cost at Mr. Bowler's figures,	$450.97
Total loss to the State as awarded,	$1.38

It will be noticed that our figures on this job would have saved the State the sum of $1.38. This is a small matter, but wait. The figures on the same job which were submitted to the Governor and Council and which acted their part in establishing that 3.14 per cent. showed that this report would cost at the figures of Burleigh & Flynt $520.76, while at our figures it would cost $534.18, showing that at our figures there would be a loss to the State of $13.42 instead of a gain of $1.38 shown by the above figures.

It might be noted, too, that our bid is 4 cents per thousand lower than the bid of the conditional bidders on straight composition while it is 10 cents per thousand lower on rule and figure work and the above "fair examples" is not only in the 4000 class but it has 223 pages of straight matter and but 17 pages of rule and figure work.

There are other examples just as interesting as this one. In other words, in point of interest there is no question but that this is a real "fair example."

Election of Officers and Entertainment of the Golden Cross Lodge.

At the regular meeting of the United Order of the Golden Cross, held in Odd Fellows' hall last week, the following officers were elected:

P. N. C.,	Lady E. E. Burnham.
N. C.,	Lady Eva Fox.
V. N. C.,	Lady Ada A. Wight.
Chaplain,	Lady Scott Robertson.
Sec. Secretary,	Lady Martha Gibson.
Sec'y and Treas.,	Lady F. W. Bisbee.
W. Herald, Sir Knight H. O. Archibald.
W. I. G.,	Lady Elvira Holt.
W. O. G.,	Lady Ida M. Rollins.

Following the election of officers the Lodge closed in regular form and a pleasing entertainment followed, in which Prof. E. L. Emmons was introduced and local talent as follows:

Solo, Dr. I. H. Wight.
Solo, Miss Jane Gibson.
Reading, Miss Martha Gibson.
Song, Margaret Herrick.

Blanche Herrick, accompanist. Prof. Emmons of Bath gave several selections from his long list of numbers, many of them difficult but all well executed. His imitation of a train leaving the station and arriving at the next was very real as was the wood sawing and saw mill in operation. The audience was pleased when the chickens were caught while the quarrel of the cats at 2 o'clock a. m. was so realistic as to cause the young ladies to jump. Those who heard him call Prof. Emmons a master of his profession and hope that in the near future he may be engaged by other lodges.

After the entertainment refreshments were served.

ONLY GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE.

"Hyomei Costs You Nothing If It Fails" Says W. E. Bosserman.

Among the many medicines upon the market that claim to cure catarrh none but Hyomei has enough faith in its own merit to offer to refund the money if it does not cure.

Hyomei is the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalation to the most remote parts of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys all catarrhal germs in the breathing organs, enriches and purifies the blood with additional ozone, and makes permanent and complete cures of catarrh.

The complete outfit costs $1.00 and comprises an inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei and a dropper. The inhaler will last a lifetime and additional bottles of Hyomei can be obtained for 50 cents.

Breathe Hyomei for a few minutes four times a day, and your catarrh will grow better from the first day's use, and will be completely cured within a short time.

It is the only treatment for catarrh where you can get your money back from a local dealer, W. E. Bosserman if it does not help.

Little Dorothy's Courtship

By VIRGINIA L. WENTZ

DOROTHY knew that it was about time for Joan and the rest of them to be returning from their sail on the lake. It would never do for Joan to find the "big fish" of the house party—that was the name she had given the young Englishman, who was talking to her alone. She, alas, was only poor little Cousin Dorothy, and acting in this particular household as Joan's mother's paid companion! So she pretended to be bored with his lordship's society.

"La-la, la-la, la-la," she hummed, sinking back into the depths of the easy chair and stretching her white arms lazily.

"I say," said the earl, "am I tiring you, Miss Dorothy?"

Dorothy stopped humming. "No," she drawled, with mock mischief, "not exactly. But"—here she smiled her sweetest smile upon him—"you're not vexed, will you, if I tell you that I'm a bit sleepy and that I must sleep in the sun? Will you draw t'is chair over for me, please?" Rising slowly she adjusted the fleur-de-lis at her waist while his lordship drew the chair to the sunny corner of the big veranda.

"How'll that do?" asked he.

"Splendidly. Now for cushions."

"How many?"

"Hundreds," said she.

He collected as many as he could carry and fetched them to her.

"Here are thousands," he announced.

"Delicious!" murmured Dorothy, sinking back into them with a sigh of content. "This is quite perfect."

"It will be when I fetch you a sunshade," he amended.

"Sunshade!" cried she. "Go away, you Goli! I want the sun!"

"You'll be pickled!" warned he.

"No," corrected she, dimpling, "preserved." Her long black lashes lay motionless on the wild rose flush of her cheeks.

The earl chuckled, and, pretending that he fancied her already asleep, crept laboriously away on tiptoe. Joan and the rest of them were in sight, and he advanced to meet them.

Joan Shannon was unquestionably a beauty. She had been photographed in every variety of pose; she had been painted by several of the most celebrated artists on two continents, but in spite of this fact she had passed through the whirl of three seasons and was still unwed.

"She must be waiting for a title," people said, as other girls far less beautiful came out, danced through a season or two, and were led to the altar by men of their choice.

However that may be, included among the guests at this particular house party at the Shannon's big country place on the sound was the young earl of Stowbridge, and it was common property that Miss Shannon already had found him very attractive.

"So awfully sorry you couldn't join us in our sail this morning," she began in her sweet, suave voice, with an accent which was the result of much travel. "Is your headache better now?"

"Pon my honor, I've not given it a thought for the last half hour. I found Miss Dorothy reading on the veranda, and she took pity on me and put down her book, and—well, somehow she must have cured my headache! She's got lovely pretty dimples, and she's a cousin of yours, didn't some one say?"

"Yes, distant. Mamma never liked me to associate much with her family when we were little, and now, as you can imagine, we aren't very—er—cousinly."

"Such fun," observed the earl, facetiously. His fair companion turned and looked at him reproachfully. "And who would wish to be 'fun'?" said she.

"Oh, I don't know," said his lordship, gallantly.

Miss Shannon found herself wondering for a moment as they walked on whether the earl might not prove testy after all. Would he be uneasy under the crushing and ordering about of which her father and mother submitted? If there was one thing she disliked it was obstaculic people. She had been brought up to expect people to agree with her.

"Of course," she sighed, shrugging her beautiful shoulders discreetly. "I feel sorry for poor little Dorothy. Mother won't need her after the autumn, and I'm sure I don't know what's going to become of her. Besides, she hasn't any practical sense. Just look at her now lying asleep in all that sun. She'll be simply black with freckles!"

That afternoon when everybody was resting for a dinner dance in the evening the earl of Stowbridge wandered into the library, a cool, dim apartment banked with books and made comfortable with couches.

He had just discovered one of his favorite authors and settled down to read when the sound of feminine voices in the adjoining room disturbed his attention. Six seconds had not elapsed when he became aware that it was no ordinary interview and that he should make a step forward to announce his presence. It was not in his character or traditions to be an eavesdropper; nevertheless he found himself curiously unable to move or utter a sound.

"Angling for him—?" It was Dorothy's voice, low and impassioned, but with a quick little gasp or two, such as would come from one who had suddenly received an unexpected douche of cold water.

"There can be no doubt of that," came Mrs. Shannon's icy tones. "Only yesterday Joan was telling me of her own misgivings!"

"Misgivings!" There was still that tremulous catch in the breath.

"Oh, of course young men will be young men," continued Mrs. Shannon, with a purr in her well bred tones. "They will pursue the girl who holds out the angling iron. You are clever—I don't dispute the fact; you are clever and calculating—but one thing I have to tell you: If you wish to remain in this household you must assume a different pose. And, remember, not another conversation alone with the earl of Stowbridge while he is under this roof. You may go now."

There was silence just for an appreciable fraction of a second; then little Dorothy seemed to be drawing herself up to her full height as she flung a defiant, passionate answer into her aunt's face:

"I thought at least you were a lady, but you're not. You're cowardly and cruel and vulgar. Oh, how can you be so?" Dorothy, sobbing miserably in her hot anger and insulted girlhood, was obliged to leave the room.

Mrs. Shannon, cool and collected, as always, touched a bell and sent the cook some orders about the salad.

After dinner, while they were dancing, the earl sought Dorothy out in the star sprinkled night, where she had wandered to a hammock under the trees, far from the chattering groups on the veranda.

"I've been wondering who was behind that lighted cigar," she said, lightly, as he joined her, and then more seriously, drawing in her breath deeply: "Isn't it splendid out here to-night? I like to catch that strong brine from the sea. It gives one courage."

"Is that what you want—courage?" asked the earl, looking at her tenderly in the starlight and feeling his big, honest heart a-throb. He sat down on a stump of a tree close by. "You're plucky enough, I fancy."

"I shall need it all, all the courage I have. I—she faltered, and under the sweet, sudden spell of sympathy her lips trembled piteously. The earl leaned forward impulsively and gently imprisoned one of her hands.

"I know," was all that he said. She measured him, not understanding.

"You see," he started to explain in his straightforward fashion. "I was in the next room this afternoon when your aunt—"

She drew away from him with terror in her eyes. "Oh," she cried, bitterly, "you overheard all that cruelty, and—and it's made you pity me!"

"It's made me love you, little one," he corrected, solemnly. "I liked you from the first moment I saw you, but now I know that I love you. Of course," he added, seeing that she still shrank from him a little, "a thing like that's easily enough said, but just give me a little hope, and I'll make it my life's business to prove it to you, dear."

He held out his hand to her like a knight of old.

Dorothy tried to speak, but her lips would not respond. Then she did a curious thing. She took his outstretched hand in her own and pressed it close against her eyes, and they were

HAPPY WOMEN.

Wouldn't any woman be happy, After years of backache suffering, Days of misery, nights of unrest, The distress of urinary troubles, To find relief and cure? No reason why any reader Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I was doctoring for kidney and liver trouble, but without benefit. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-McLure Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

MIGRATION OF SQUIRRELS.

Singular Sight Witnessed by Audubon from an Ohio River Flatboat.

There was some excuse for killing squirrels in early times, for they were a great pest, being great thieves of seed corn and green corn. More than a dozen different varieties were indigenous to the United States, but the best known was the common gray migratory squirrel, says Youth's Companion. It was called migratory on account of the long journeys it sometimes made. Occasionally, for reasons of its own, probably in search of food, these squirrels used to migrate from one part of the country to another in great numbers. Once

Beautiful Gowns Are on Display

This morning we loitered in the shops, gazed with awe—sometimes with smiling contempt—at the "creations" just put on display for the much advertised openings.

Such delicate fabrics, such filmy laces and such quantities used, such beautiful white evening coats, such beautiful hats. As we traversed the two short blocks where the windows tempted, we thought here, for woman-kind, anyway, all the vanities of this earth were spread out.

There were dressmakers and "home dressmakers" in the admiring crowd, and it was interesting to listen to the talk. As we stood with several others before a really attractive, as well as very expensive gown, we overheard: "Just little dabs of different kinds of goods put here and there!" The creator of the creation doubtless would have very much disliked her work of art thus summed up; but the speaker felt radiant that "little dabs" could be made use of, economy and style need not be at war.

But to get the foundation on which to put the "dabs" of trimming involves no small outlay, for the stuffs offered this season are of exceptional beauty and costliness. Of course they can be copied in much cheaper materials, and often acceptably, too; but the gowns at the opening displays are never on the inexpensive order. There are numerous real lace gowns, gowns with real lace in great, deep scallops, or yards and yards of medium-width real lace. However, there is another fashionable trimming that gives as good an effect, if not better, and costs but a fraction as much as the lace; it is a substantial illusion or net, quite extensively used for long draperies on the new dresses. We noticed one of the palest gray-blue satin, white net hanging in pleats from the shoulder to the hem of the gown. There was a yoke of pale gray-blue satin decked with great rose-tipped flowers of velvet applique; the whole a misty, soft coloring, lighted by the rose suffusion.

Right here we may say that pink is appearing as it has not had a chance before in years, it is in excellent style.

There are whole show-windows of pink gowns and pink hats, and very beautiful ones. One hat, the very prettiest of all the brave array, was a small pointed turban of unobtrusive gilt grown and gilt lace brim. It was trimmed with one mammoth shaded pink rose, from the side of which uprose a shaded pink plume. The coloring was perfect, just a hint of rose pink against the soft folds of gilt.

Gilt and silver are fashionable; not too much of either, at your peril. Too much looks tawdry, circusy, and is sure to tarnish. The spangled robes are seen, but are not in best style, there is too much cheap glitter about them. One smart imported gown of dark violet broadcloth had for trimming such touches of gold as appeared in gilt eyelets and gilt prongs to pass through the eyelets, for the lacing now so popular; another had each button set in a gold rim, and a mere edge of gold braid peeping out from the edges of tucks; while lace boleros had the pattern picked out in gold thread, it was hard to tell whether the foundation was white or gold.

There was one fetching robe of pink silk of softest sheen, made princess fashion, the draped bodice continuing by means of artful gores into a wide spreading skirt. A white lace princess, which was very graceful, was admirably adapted to a slender figure; but the old-fashioned, absolutely tight-fitting princess is no more, the draped bodice has taken the place of glove-like waist.

To return to gray—some one has spoken of the new season as one of gold and gray, there being so many gray gowns, so much gold trimming. Gray street gowns are in much favor, and come in both rough and smooth cloths. There is a good serviceable chevot, warranted to wear well; then there are delicate grays for afternoon wear that will have to be as carefully looked after as though they were white. A little yellow is liked on the pale grays, and just a trifle of gilt.

We noticed how the mere touch of velvet was the proper thing, not heavy masses. A white lace gown had about it no color save that the square neck was outlined below lace frills with mirror of velvet of a delicious pink shade; and there was the same trimming above the frills of the elbow sleeves. Another white lace gown had a similar trimming of gobelin blue, and applique flowers of gobelin blue and blush-rose. The accompanying illustration, which appeared originally in the Dry Goods Economist, is one of the season's best models of elaborate dress.

One charming pink hat was made with a crown of a satiny silk, the wide brim of the same material lightened by white illusion, that smoothly covered the pink, and about the crown, flat on the brim, was a wreath of moss rosebuds—the fashionable flower of the past summer over in England. We prophesied that the theater audiences of the winter will, almost to a woman, wear the fashionable pink hat. It is very attractive now, and in colder weather will be doubly so; we had a half mind to say we didn't care how common it became. It is a long time since pink has been common, it strikes one as quite a novelty.

A PRETTY, SIMPLE FROCK.

utilized for aprons. The Mother Hubbard with straps over the shoulder is the approved pattern.

Shepherd plaid dresses will be much worn again this season, and it is no wonder they continue in popularity; they look so fresh, keep clean so long. When one adds color to the black and white combination, it is made gay enough to be suitable for childhood.

Gray furs are seldom becoming to children; white furs universally so. This year we have such lovely snowy furs, both for grown-ups and the small fry; and by sending occasionally to the cleaner a white fur after all is not too bright and good for frequent use. Of course, we do not mean one should purchase ermine for the tots; there are several white furs much more appropriate and much more inexpensive.

TUMORS CONQUERED

SERIOUS OPERATIONS AVOIDED

Unqualified Success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the Case of Mrs. Fannie D. Fox.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy, Tumor.

The growth of a tumor is so slowly that frequently its presence is not suspected until it is far advanced.

Mrs. Fannie D. Fox

So-called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages, or the presence of danger may be made manifest by profuse menstruation, accompanied by unusual pain, from the ovaries down the groin and thighs.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation; secure Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound right away and begin its use.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., will give you her advice free of all charge if you will write her about yourself. Your letter will be seen by women only.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— I take the liberty to congratulate you on the success I have had with your wonderful medicine. Eighteen months ago my monthly menstruation stopped. Shortly after I felt so badly that I submitted to a thorough examination by a physician and was told that I had a tumor on the uterus and would have to undergo an operation.

"Soon after I read one of your advertisements and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. After trying five bottles as directed the tumor is entirely gone. I have been examined by a physician and he says I have no signs of a tumor now. It has also brought my monthly menstruation around once more, and I am entirely well."—Fannie D. Fox, 7 Chestnut Street, Bradford, Pa.

FIND USE FOR PERIWINKLES

Formerly Despised Shellfish Make an Excellent Bait for Codfish.

The despised periwinkle, which overruns the waters of Long Island sound, and which for years has been considered worse than useless, has suddenly taken on a marketable value, and the oystermen are reaping a good harvest from their capture.

The periwinkle has become valuable because the codfish, never before known to be an epicure, has taken a liking to him. Their tender tails are now the most delicious morsel for Mr. Cod's table, and even the tough body part of the periwinkle is now gobbled by the cod in preference to outleaves, herring or clams.

This peculiar whim of the codfish was only recently discovered by the eastern fishermen, who had been wondering why the fish did not take hold of the usual bait. As there are few or no periwinkles in the eastern waters the fishermen of that region are now sending to the west end of the sound for periwinkles, which are shipped east by the barrel.

The periwinkle is a gastropod shellfish, a large salt water snail in fact, the shell of which runs from a minute size up to seven and eight inches in length. The part of the body which projects from the shell proper is protected with a thin, transparent covering, and the body is tough, while the tail within the shell is soft and tender.

Periwinkles feed upon the oysters, and for this all that have been caught for many years have been broiled to death, together with the starfish and the drills, the other oyster pests, and then thrown into the sound again. A successful industry is now promised in the wholesale capture of the "winkie" for bait.

THE TENURE OF YOUR LIFE

It Is Said May Be Determined Approximately by Physical Indications.

Every person carries about with him the physical indications of his longevity, says the Medical Record. A long-lived person may be distinguished from a short-lived person at sight. In many instances a physician may look at the hand of a patient and tell whether he will live or die.

The primary conditions of longevity are that the heart, lungs, and digestive organs, as well as the brain, should be large, the trunk will be long and the limbs comparatively short. The person will appear tall in sitting and short in standing. The hand will have a long and somewhat heavy palm and short fingers. The brain will be deeply seated, as shown by the orifice of the ear being low. The blue, hazel or brown hazel eye; as showing an intermixture of temperament, is a favorable indication. The nostrils being large, open and free indicates large lungs. A pinched and half closed nostril indicates small or weak lungs.

These are general points of distinction from those of short-lived tendencies, but, of course, subject to the usual individual exceptions. Still, it is well acknowledged that the characteristics noted are expressions of inherent potentiality, which have been proven on the basis of abundant statistical evidence.

JAPS ARE SAFE BORROWERS

The Imperial Government Credit Is Excellent at Home and Abroad.

To lend money to the mikado is pronounced as safe as buying United States bonds and certainly far more profitable. The Japanese Imperial government credit is first-class abroad with security, and it is double first-class at home without security, a contrast to the recent refusal of St. Petersburg bankers to float a $75,000,000 internal loan for the imperial government. Japan's total external and internal war loans to date aggregate $650,000,000, with an annual interest charge of $33,100,000, with the profitable government owned railways not yet borrowed upon; Japan's government tobacco monopoly is an increasingly paying proposition. In 1904-5 it yielded a net revenue of $10,536,000, nearly doubling in three years, and in 1905-6 it will be $16,005,000, a further increase of nearly 60 per cent. in one year. Baron Kaneko says his countrymen have saved money by the war, that industries proceeded much as usual, that they have made most of their war material, weapons, ammunition, and hospital supplies, giving employment to great numbers of people. He expects to see "Korea and Manchuria invaded by an army of artisans, farmers and laborers."

Remarkable Fortress.

In the northern part of Madagascar is the most remarkable natural fortress in the world. It is occupied by a wild tribe who call themselves the People of the Rocks. The fortress is a lofty and precipitous rock of enormous size, 1,000 feet high and eight square miles in area. Its sides are so steeped that it cannot be climbed without artificial means. Within it is hollow, and the only entrance is by a subterranean passage.
